उखा मंत्राः - उखाग्निः (The Transformative Power of Ukha)

Abstract:
This study explores the concept of Ukha (उखा) and Ukha Agni (उखाग्नि) within the Vēdic tradition, highlighting their metaphysical and practical significance. The Vēdākshara Kha (ख) embodies qualities such as enthusiasm, courage, determination, desire, passion, strength, and power, which collectively define the nature of Ukha. Living beings, through the performance of Agni's functions and the conduct of yajñas, generate the necessary Agni for the production of Ukha Agni. Earthly components provide the requisite resources and effort to sustain the capacities of the body's three constituents, while the mind illuminates consciousness, underscoring the futility of life without Ukha, as reflected in the RigVēda: "Manah Shashtani Indriyani." Recitation of Ukha mantras during yajñas ensures that Ukha Agni is vividly kindled and manifests across all three bodily components. This synthesis bridges Vēdic linguistic symbolism, ritual practice, and metaphysical philosophy, emphasizing the integral role of Ukha in spiritual and existential fulfillment.

Introduction:

- कृष्ण यजुर्वेद (4-1-5)

This is the Ukha mantra. The Kṛṣṇa YajurVēda elaborates upon it extensively and declares its significance and purpose. In the Ukha mantras, the first Vēdākshara is "u" and the second is "kha." It is noteworthy that the second Vēdākshara is not the primary consonant "ka" of the ka-varga, but rather the secondary consonant "kha," which combines the vowel "a" with the aspirated consonant sound.
The Vēdākshara "u" signifies the bhāvin, that which pertains to the future or potential. The simple consonant "ka" denotes the actions we perform, whereas "kha" expresses the assured, unobstructed, and fruitful accomplishment of such action. The "kha" Vēdākshara thus conveys vigor, courage, determination, desire, passion, strength, and energy. Hence, the Vēda employs the sound "kha" to indicate the dynamic and resolute quality of activity.
Therefore, Ukha denotes the power that impels action with courage and enthusiasm. This fire is the Ukha Agni. Living beings must attain the form of this Agni; this is achieved through performing acts of fire - ritual actions and sacrificial practices (yajñas). Through such acts, the Ukha Agni - the energizing fire essential for generating sacrificial heat is kindled. The force responsible for producing this sacred fire is called Ukha.
Among living beings, there are three fundamental components. The first is the Pṛthvī-bhāga (the terrestrial element), which is constituted of the five great elements (pañca-bhūtas) and the material substances derived from them. This Pṛthvī-bhāga is engaged in the endeavor to procure the requisite means and resources (sādhana-sampatti) necessary for the sustenance and functioning of the three bodies (tridēha-bhāgas). Its activity is characterized primarily by effort (prayatna) that is, by striving to obtain and arrange the material and instrumental wealth essential for the support and operation of the three corporeal levels.
The daily necessities required for the body and the pleasures sought by the mind cannot be attained merely through external sacrificial acts (yajñas). The powers necessary for the realm of knowledge (jñāna-bhāga) are of a different order, this power is known as Ukhā-śakti. Within the threefold constitution of existence, it is the first part , the Pṛthvī-bhāga, that engages in the acquisition of material and instrumental means, and this process is related to the Pṛthvī-loka (the terrestrial plane).

If this Pṛthvī-loka does not attain firmness and stability, then life itself becomes fragile and insubstantial. The first part, therefore, is the Pṛthvī-bhāga; the second is the Manas (mind), which corresponds to the Antarikṣa (the intermediate or atmospheric region). In that realm, life without Ukhā-śakti appears futile, for as the statement "manaḥ ṣaṣṭhānī indriyāṇi" (Bhagavad Gītā 15.7) indicates, the mind governs and coordinates the five senses. Yet, mere sensory knowledge (pañcendriya-jñāna) is insufficient to awaken or sustain Ukhā-śakti.

Along with it, the power of the mind must also be joined. That is to say, when the energies of the six senses unite, they direct the mind toward the path of Ukhā. In this way, the Antarikṣa (intermediate or atmospheric realm), being occupied by the mind, becomes animated and inspired by the Ukhā-śakti that resides within it.

The third aspect is Divi (the celestial or divine realm), which pertains to the domain of the deities. It is the locus where the purposes of life attain fulfillment and where actions conducive to the realization of life's higher aims take place. At this level, the being (jīva) becomes a purohita, a priest or mediator of sacred action. Therefore, during the performance of the yajña, Ukhā-mantras must be recited so that the Ukhā-agni (the sacrificial fire symbolizing divine vigor) may be kindled and made to shine brightly in all three bodily spheres.

Among living beings exist the three dimensions - Pṛthvī (earth), Manas (mind, corresponding to Antarikṣa), and Divi (heaven). Since the mind itself constitutes the Antarikṣa, it is essential to ignite the Ukhā-śakti within all three - earth, atmosphere, and heaven. The Vasus unite with the Pṛthvī through the Gāyatrī-chandas (metre), the Rudras stabilize the Antarikṣa through the Triṣṭubh-chandas, and the Ādityas perfect the Ukhā-form through the recitation of the Jagatī-chandas.

The Vasu and Rudra elements represent the vital forces within us. To kindle the flame of knowledge (jñāna-dīpa-kalikā), one must daily perform Agni-related acts accompanied by the recitation of the Ukhā-mantras. Through this, one acquires harmony (samrīti) and strength (śakti) across the three realms. Unless the three bodies (trideha) of a being are illuminated, external objects or worldly possessions cannot bring true benefit to humanity or to any living being. Neither scriptures nor the teachings of preceptors can by themselves make the body radiant. If the body itself, the primal field of manifestation, does not first become luminous, the purpose of the Ukhā-mantras is unfulfilled.

To attain this radiance, the powers of the Vasus, Rudras, and Ādityas - the divine energies must be ignited. Yet this activation transcends ordinary human capacity. The three chandas - Gāyatrī, Triṣṭubh, and Jagatī, serve as the metrical forms through which these forces are awakened. Only Vēdāksharas (akṣaras) imbued with these chandas possess the power to stir and mobilize the divine energies mentioned above.

Here, the term akṣara-artha signifies "purpose" or "function," while mantrārtha denotes the "efficacy" or "intended result" of a mantra. The meaning (artha) of a mantra is inseparably bound to its chandas (metrical structure). The Vēdic metres were manifested precisely to bind the mind (manas) to the sacred Vēdākshara (akṣara). Therefore, all Vēdic chandas are based fundamentally upon the numerical and vibrational principles of syllabic arrangement.

For instance, in the Gāyatrī meter, each pāda (metrical line) contains eight Vēdāksharas. During adhyayana and pravacana (study and recitation), the mind remains focused on these Vēdāksharas and on their numerical structure. Why does each Vēdākshara possess a distinct meaning?

What, then, is the significance of a pāda that completes the full eight-Vēdākshara measure? Similarly, what is the experiential or cognitive realization (ārtha-sphūrti) that arises in the being (jīva) upon the completion of the eleven Vēdāksharas of the Triṣṭubh meter? The Jagatī meter extends the Gāyatrī measure by one and a half times, thereby producing a correspondingly greater or higher meaning.

It is observed, however, that in certain instances the Gāyatrī pāda, which ideally contains eight Vēdāksharas, may appear with only six or seven. For example, in the RigVēda, Ninth Maṇḍala, Third Sūkta, the first verse (ṛk) begins with the phrase "eṣa devo amartyaḥ." This mantra, although assigned to the Gāyatrī meter, contains only seven Vēdāksharas instead of eight. The question naturally arises: what is the reason for this deviation?

By what numerical principle of Vēdāksharas has the Vēda arranged this? In that particular instance, the pronunciation does not require much exertion, yet it is also not as effortless as articulating the simple consonants क, च, ट, त, प. Therefore, the consonant "य" functions as an intermediate type of sound.

In this context, the conjunct consonants (saṃyuktākṣaras) involving ra, ta, ya, and ha are significant, since the Vēdāksharas र and य belong to the class of antastha (semi-vowels), while ह, combined with the visarga requires a greater expenditure of breath. Thus, the combination forms a compound or conjunct Vēdākshara.

How many Vēdāksharas can such a conjunct be counted as? Are only those sounds audible to the ear considered Vēdāksharas? How much articulatory energy is required to utter a single Vēdākshara? Is that effort itself what defines a Vēdākshara? The Vēda instructs the mind to measure the units of life-energy (prāṇa-śakti-guḷikas) embedded in every Vēdākshara uttered by the living being (jīva).
Each Vēdākshara, when spoken, requires a pulse of air issuing from the region of the heart and lungs, which sets the vocal channels into motion. In the mantra "eṣa devo amartyaḥ," the segment rtyaḥ - composed of र त य ह (with visarga) requires not one but two pulses of breath for proper articulation.
Thus, the Vēda trains the mind to withdraw from the mere external utterance of Vēdāksharas and to perceive the vital force that animates them, establishing the relationship between akṣara and prāṇa.
As one comes to understand the correlation between Vēdāksharas (akṣaras) and their metrical structure (chandas), the intrinsic nature of the energies (śaktis) within living beings becomes clear. Without knowledge of Vēdic meter, the nature of Vēdāksharas, and the numerical principle governing their arrangement, neither recitation (pāṭhana) nor study (svādhyāya) yields true benefit.
The Vēda, through the diversity of its syllabic structure, has itself generated the various meters. The regulated pronunciation of these Vēdāksharas, when performed in accordance with chandas, awakens within the inner being the life-force and the divine agencies - Vasus, Rudras, and Ādityas, who are the causes of the vital functions.
The Vēda clearly declares that these energies strengthen the Pṛthivī (earth), Antarikṣa (intermediate space), and Dyu (celestial) realms within living beings. This vital force is referred to as the Ukha-śakti, the generative and sustaining energy.
It reveals the presence of three bodies, three internal divisions, and three divine powers within the human being, thereby endowing the jīva with strength, enthusiasm, courage, desire, and the fullness of all vital impulses. A living being devoid of this Ukha-śakti is considered inert and purposeless.

Discussion:

In this section we will take some important points from the introduction and give evidence through methods and reference from Vēdas.

The Vēdākshara 'Kha' (ख) in the Vēdic tradition signifies enthusiasm, courage, determination, desire, passion, strength, and power. Accordingly, *Ukha (*उखा)denotes a force that boldly enters the field of action with courage. This Agni is the *Ukha Agni (*उखाग्नि) [Method-1, Ref (1)].
Living beings must acquire the form of Agni. By performing the functions of Agni and conducting yajñas, they generate the Agni necessary for the production of the *Ukha Agni (*उखाग्नि). The power employed to obtain this Ukha Agni is called *Ukha (*उखा) [Method-2, Ref (2)].
The components of the Earth gather and provide the necessary effort and resources required for the attainment of the capacities of the three bodily components [Method-3, Ref (3)].
The first is the earthly component, and the second is the mind. The mind illuminates the space of consciousness. There, the life of those without Ukha appears futile. This is why the RigVēda states: "Manah Shashtani Indriyani" [Method-4, Ref (4)].
That is, during the performance of a yajña, Ukha mantras must be recited so that the Ukha Agni may be vividly kindled and illuminated in all three components of the body [Method-5, Ref (5)].
In all the three worlds, one must acquire balance and strength. Unless the three bodies become radiant, the external world offers no true benefit to human beings or living creatures. Neither scriptures nor the teachings of gurus alone can render the bodies luminous. If the body itself, which is primary, does not first become a sphere of light, then the recitation of the Ukha mantras serves no purpose [Method-6, Ref (6)].

Methods:

Method-1:

YajurVēda (17-65)

- देवता: अग्निर्देवता

- ऋषि: विधृतिर्ऋषिः
- छन्द: निचृदार्ष्यनुष्टुप्
- स्वर: गान्धारः

क्रम॑ध्वम॒ग्निना॒ नाक॒मुख्य॒ हस्ते॑षु॒ बिभ्र॑तः। दि॒वस्पृ॒ष्ठ स्व॑र्ग॒त्वा मि॒श्रा दे॒वेभि॑राध्वम् ॥६५ ॥

Essence of YajurVēda (17-65):

Carrying in your hands that which has been ritually prepared and purified through the fire of liberation (Agni), proceed onward. Together with the devatas, perform hymns of praise in manifold ways for the attainment of heaven (Svarga). Having thus realized the celestial realm (Dyuloka), remain therein in steadfast stability.

Proposition:

- Question: What is the meaning of the Vēdāksharas "u" and "kha" in the term Ukhyam?
  Answer: The Vēdākshara "u" denotes the future or what is to come, while "kha" signifies enthusiasm, determination, and desire.
- Question: Who are those that remain steadfast along with the devatas of the celestial realm (Dyuloka)?
  Answer: Those who perform the yajña with the recitation of the Ukha mantras remain established with the celestial deities.
- Question: What do the ritual officiants do while reciting hymns and holding in their hands that which has been ritually prepared in the fire (Agni)?
  Answer: They offer oblations to the devata Agni.
- Question: Who attains liberation (mokṣa)?
  Answer: Those who perform the yajña with the Ukha mantras attain liberation.
- Question: What is the meaning of Ukha?
  Answer: Ukha signifies the power that impels one to enter the field of action with courage and determination.
- Question: Which fire is referred to as the fire in which the offering is cooked through Ukha Agni?
  Answer: That fire is known as Ukha Agni.
- Question: What do the ritual priests (ṛtviks) hold while proceeding toward heaven?
  Answer: The ṛtviks, holding in their hands the offering prepared in the fire and accompanied by the recitation of the Ukha mantras, proceed toward heaven.

Conclusion of Method-1:

The Vēdākshara 'Kha' (ख) in the Vēdic tradition signifies enthusiasm, courage, determination, desire, passion, strength, and power. Accordingly, Ukha (उखा) denotes a force that boldly enters the field of action with courage. This is the Ukha Agni (उखाग्नि). This conceptual analysis has been examined and substantiated with the aid of the YajurVēda mantra (17-65).

Method-2:

YajurVēda (1-8)

- देवता: अग्निर्देवता
- ऋषि: परमेष्ठी प्रजापतिर्ऋषिः
- छन्द: निचृत् अतिजगती
- स्वर: निषादः

धूर॑सि॒ धूर्व॒ धूर्व॑न्तं॒ धूर्व॒ तं योऽस्मान् धूर्व॑ति॒ तं धूर्व॒ यं व॒यं धूर्वा॑मः। दे॒वाना॑मसि॒ वह्नि॑तम॒ सस्नि॑तमं॒ पप्रि॑तमं॒ जुष्ट॑तमं देव॒हूत॑मम् ॥८॥

Essence of YajurVēda (1-8):

The supreme Agni exists to invoke the deities in their excellence, thereby granting the wise their highest victory, utmost joy, and perfect satisfaction.
Punish the sinful who cause us suffering. Punish those from whom we must endure affliction.
O Agni who inflicts punishment, chastise them. You are the destroyer of all faults.

Proposition:

- Question: In what manner does Agni exist?
  Answer: He exists in a supreme form, inviting other deities in their excellence, destroying all faults, and capable of inflicting punishment.
- Question: Why should the deities be invoked through Agni?
  Answer: Because these invoked deities, as destroyers of all faults, grant us supreme victory, exalted joy, and utmost satisfaction.
- Question: In what manner does Agni inflict punishment?
  Answer: He is present to chastise the sinful, those who bring us suffering, and anyone who deserves punishment for their misdeeds.
- Question: Where does this supreme Agni reside?
  Answer: He resides in the successful execution of the wise, for attaining victory, joy, and satisfaction, and in the courage required to administer punishment.

Conclusion of Method-2:
Living beings must acquire the form of Agni. By performing the functions of Agni and conducting yajñas, they generate the Agni necessary for the production of the Ukha Agni. The power employed to obtain this Ukha Agni is called Ukha. This has been demonstrated with the aid of the YajurVēda mantra (1-8).

Method-3:
RigVēda (1-185-7)

- देवता: द्यावापृथिव्यौ
- ऋषि: अगस्त्यो मैत्रावरुणिः
- छन्द: त्रिष्टुप्
- स्वर: धैवतः

उ॒र्वी पृ॒थ्वी ब॑हु॒ले दू॒रेअ॑न्ते॒ उप॑ ब्रुवे॒ नम॑सा य॒ज्ञे अ॒स्मिन्। द॒धाते॒ ये सु॒भगे॑ सु॒प्रतू॑र्ती॒ द्यावा॒ रक्ष॑तं पृथिवी नो॒ अभ्वा॑त् ॥

Essence of RigVēda (1-185-7):
O Thou who hast grown greatly, both afar and near! Vastly extended Earth, within these, the Yajna is performed with reverent salutations. May the two - Heaven and Earth, which establish firm support and bestow delightful prosperity, who move with swiftness and sustain all, protect us from all transgressions.

Proposition:

- Question: Who is described as “grown greatly, both afar and near”?
  Answer: The phrase refers to the all-pervading cosmic force that expands throughout both the distant and the proximate realms, symbolizing the ever-present and ever-expanding energy of the divine manifested through Heaven and Earth.
- Question: What is the significance of the “vastly extended Earth” in the verse?
  Answer: The “vastly extended Earth” represents the foundational plane of existence, the material support upon which the Yajña is performed. It stands for stability, nourishment, and the receptivity of divine energy.
- Question: What is meant by “within these, the Yajña is performed with reverent salutations”?
  Answer: This denotes that the sacred act of Yajña - both an external ritual and an inner spiritual process, occurs within the realms of Heaven and Earth, accompanied by humility and reverence, acknowledging their cosmic role in sustaining life and consciousness.
- Question: Who are the “two - Heaven and Earth” mentioned in the verse?

Answer: Heaven (Dyauḥ) and Earth (Pṛithvī) are the primordial deities representing the dual principles of expansion and stability, consciousness and matter, the upper and lower worlds, together forming the cosmic field in which life and sacrifice unfold.

- Question: What blessings do Heaven and Earth bestow according to the Mantra?
  Answer: They bestow aiśvarya (prosperity and divine sovereignty), dhāraṇā (steadfastness and mental concentration), and the dynamic movement of life-energy that sustains the universe.
- Question: What is the prayer offered to Heaven and Earth at the end of the Mantra?
  Answer: The prayer seeks protection from all aparādhas (transgressions or disharmonies), invoking Heaven and Earth to guard the Yajña doer and preserve the sanctity of the Yajña, symbolically, to maintain the harmony between body, mind, and spirit.

Conclusion of Method-3:
Through the RigVēda (1-185-7) mantra, it is revealed that the Pṛthvī-bhāga, the terrestrial or earthly aspect, provides the necessary efforts and resources (sādhana-sampatti) required for the sustenance and accomplishment of the three bodily constituents.

Method-4:
RigVēda (10-20-1)

- देवता: अग्निः
- ऋषि: विमद ऐन्द्रः प्राजापत्यो वा वसुकृद्वा वासुक्रः
- छन्द: आसुरीत्रिष्टुप्
- स्वर: धैवतः

भद्रं नो अपि वातय मनः ॥

Essence of RigVēda (10-20-1):
Certainly, inspire our mind toward liberation.
Proposition:

- Question: Who inspires?
  Answer: The devata of this mantra is Agni. Therefore, Agni inspires.
- Question: Whom does Agni inspire?
  Answer: The mind.
- Question: Why should the mind be inspired?
  Answer: The mind contemplates what it perceives. These contemplations form our efforts; hence, the mind must be inspired.
- Question: For what purpose should the mind be inspired?
  Answer: For liberation (moksha).

Conclusion of RigVēda (10-20-1):
The first is the earthly component, and the second is the mind. The mind illuminates the space of consciousness. There, the life of those without Ukha appears futile. This is substantiated with the aid of the RigVēda mantra (10-20-1): "Manah Shashtani Indriyani".

Method-5:
Yajur Vēda (14-1)

- देवता: अश्विनौ देवते
- ऋषि: उशना ऋषिः
- छन्द: त्रिष्टुप्
- स्वर: धैवतः

ध्रुवक्षितिर्ध्रुवयोनिर्ध्रुवासि ध्रुवं योनिमासीद साधुया। उख्यस्य केतुं प्रथमं जुषाणाऽ अश्विनाऽध्वर्यू सादयतामिह त्वा ॥१ ॥

Essence of Yajur Vēda (14-1):

Even that which has been prepared with the highest virtue, the most excellent offering, is to be worshipped and enjoyed upon the Earth, who herself remains firm and steadfast. The Earth, possessing a stable resting ground, is endowed with unwavering righteousness (niścala-dharma). May you, O Earth, remain firmly established as the enduring foundation and cause of all; and may the Adhvaryus and the divine Aśvins rightly and perfectly uphold you in this stability.

Proposition:

- Question: What is referred to as "the most excellent offering" in this mantra?
  Answer: The phrase denotes that which is prepared with supreme virtue and devotion, symbolizing the highest form of Yajña or offering consecrated through righteous action (śreṣṭha-dharma).
- Question: How is the Earth described in this Mantra?
  Answer: The Earth is depicted as firm, steadfast, and endowed with niścala-dharma, the quality of unshakable righteousness and stability, serving as the immovable foundation for all beings.
- Question: What is meant by "the Earth being a stable resting ground"?
  Answer: It signifies that the Earth provides the essential support for all forms of life and ritual action, embodying both physical and moral steadiness necessary for cosmic and spiritual order.
- Question: Who are invoked to uphold the Earth in this mantra?
  Answer: The Adhvaryus, the officiating priests of the YajurVēdic tradition and the twin deities Aśvins are invoked to firmly establish and sustain the Earth in her divine steadiness.
- Question: What does the act of "upholding the Earth" symbolically represent?
  Answer: It represents the harmonization of divine order (ṛta) through human participation in Yajña, ensuring the stability of both the cosmic and terrestrial realms.

Conclusion of Method-5:
That is to say, during the performance of the yajña, the officiating priests (adhvaryus) must recite the Ukha mantras addressed to the Aśvins, in order to kindle and make radiant the Ukha fire (Ukha–agni) within all three corporeal regions (the three bodies).

Method-6:
RigVēda (1-164-35)

- देवता: विश्वेदेवा:
- ऋषि: दीर्घतमा औचथ्यः
- छन्द: विराट्त्रिष्टुप्
- स्वर: धैवतः

इ॒यं वेदि॒: परो॒ अन्त॑: पृथि॒व्या अ॒यं य॒ज्ञो भुव॑नस्य॒ नाभि॑:। अ॒यं सोमो॒ वृष्णो॒ अश्व॑स्य॒ रेतो॑ ब्र॒ह्मायं वा॒चः प॑र॒मं व्यो॑म ॥

Essence of RigVēda (1-164-35):
This Earth is like the ultimate, intrinsic sacrificial altar. The one who realizes it comprehends the navel, the central essence of the firmament. The one who understands this sacrifice perceives it as the vital energy (vīrya) of the powerful Sun. The one who realizes the supreme abode of the Vēdic Word recognizes it as the realm of the heavens.

Proposition:

- Question: What are the three worlds mentioned in this mantra?
  Answer: The Earth (Bhūmi), the mid-space (Antarikṣa), and the celestial realm (Dyuloka).
- Question: What does the mantra say about these three worlds?
  Answer: It instructs us to know them, that is, to acquire their respective powers.
- Question: What is the source or foundation of these three?
  Answer: The sky (Ākāśa), which is the abode of the Vēdic Word (Vēda Vāk). In other words, their energy arises from the power of the Vēdic Word.
- Philosophically, these three worlds correspond to the three forms of the human body: the physical energy of the material body, the vital energy (prāṇa-śakti), and the cognitive energy (jñāna-śakti). The ultimate source of all these energies is the Vēdic Word itself.

Conclusion of Method-6:
In all three worlds, one must acquire balance and strength. Unless the three bodies become radiant, the external world offers no true benefit to human beings or living creatures. Neither scriptures nor the teachings of gurus alone can render the bodies luminous. If the body itself, which is primary, does not first become a sphere of light, then the recitation of the Ukha mantras serves no purpose.

Conclusion:
The concept of Ukha and the manifestation of Ukha Agni underscore the profound integration of linguistic, ritual, and metaphysical dimensions in the Vēdic tradition. Ukha embodies the essential qualities of courage, strength, and determination, which are activated through the disciplined performance of Agni's functions and yajñas. The Earth and bodily components provide the necessary foundation and resources, while the mind illuminates consciousness, highlighting the indispensable role of Ukha in a purposeful life. The recitation of Ukha mantras ensures that Ukha Agni is effectively kindled across all three bodily constituents, reinforcing both spiritual and practical efficacy. Collectively, these insights illustrate how Vēdic philosophy interweaves cosmic principles with human effort, offering a holistic framework for attaining spiritual fulfillment, cognitive clarity, and existential resilience.
